Family Matters

A Weekly Publication of the St. Augustine Rd church of Christ

If the secularists were correct that there is no God, then there would be no consequences either. But God has not freed secular man from the consequences of his actions. If he acts unfaithfully, the secular world, against all that it claims to be true, begins imposing the moral standards it claims do not exist.

On one hand, the secular society says that everything goes, but everything doesn't go, everything doesn't work, and the secularist gets slapped back to the reality that everything is not OK because life has boundaries.

These mysterious, inexplicable, pervasive laws remain in place. The secularistic society swims against the current of God's will.

Does it make them wake up and admit their fault? Mostly not, but only because their lusts for immediate pleasures lead them to bargain away their future.

In hope against hope, they preach their secular values, destructive to self, family, home, and society. As the home collapses, so does society. It's a collapse that's predicted by God: You cannot sow evil—the unprincipled anything-goes lifestyle—and still get good.

God is not mocked, says Paul to the Galatians. Men can act as if there are no boundaries. Or society can redraw the boundaries to encompass their latest pursuits of power and passion. But God's boundaries remain and, until secular society humbles itself to admit them, it will continue to bang its head against the wall, never admitting why it is bruised.
